

Dream Lake

The Dream Lake area of Alarius is home to elven villages to the north in Lonesome Woods and human settlements clustered mostly around Dream Lake, and inland sea. Goblins were once common here but their numbers have declined to a fraction of what it once was. The Thorn of Tuzigz in Sourwood Bog is a goblin monument, although its significance is unknown. The Goblin Tree on the blasted and sere plane is the entryway into the subterranean goblin kingdom below. The elven ruins of Vorvonvale sit unchanged as a reminder of the great elven/goblin wars which claimed so many lives generations ago. The animosity continues to this day, with both sides suspicious of the other. The goblins' low numbers makes an all-out war today with the elves a suicidal endeavor, so they grudgingly co-exist.

Colonies of dark elves dwell beneath the Spiney Ridge Mountains, one of their Temples of the Spider Queen standing in a valley of the mountain range as a warning to others.

Witch's Wood is a haunted forest and home to monsters like trolls, hags and dark fey. The Eye of the Moon is a henge built by elves forgotten ages ago to track the movement of the sun and moon and stars. Nightmare Rock is a steep mountain said to be inhabited by nightmares made real. Few return from Nightmare Rock and those who do tell of flesh-eating giants and demons.