

One of the world's southernmost inhabited areas, it's known for its rugged, remote terrain of frozen mountains and rugged hills sheltering arctic bears, polar worms, and winter wolves. The Singing Lights are visible during the unbroken winter nights, and summer brings the Forever Sun—sunlight 24 hours a day.

The southern reaches are always frozen, but the northern coastal regions are green during the polar summers. It is during these warmer months that the sturdy inhabitants can be seen fishing and hunting the seals and waddling birds that visit Ezrute to mate.

What many who visit Ezrute find odd however, is the abundance of fresh fruit, vegetables, and exotic meats in the villages, even when the land outside is frozen solid in ice. When asked how they manage to keep these foods fresh for so long, the people of Ezrute merely smile and mumble something about a lost valley protected by the gods...
