

If one were to clear the stair blockage (which would enrage the villagers), then they would enter the crypt. The floor has cracked tiles, covered in lichen and a thin film of water from seepage above. They are therefore extremely slippery.

There are various ornate coffins, each containing a mummy as well as assorted treasure, especially golden funereal masks. There are roaming ghouls, wights and zombies, in the main hall as well as the basement of some of the house basements (which are accessed via cave-ins or blocked stairs from the ruined houses above. In some of the alcoves are howling banshees, where there is also a fair bit of liturgical treasure. Finally, in the southernmost alcove is a highly decorated statue of an enormous demon – which transforms into the real thing if it is touched. Pity it is covered with jewels and gold and gems.

The stairs down are near the north-eastern end.
