

map is Traraise_Faire_Caves_The_Haunted_Mountains_region.fcw

A hill fort with half-elves and humans, kobold and orc villages, and a set of caves run by half-elves. Mostly a wild area. Merchant caravans hire many guards of various levels to cope with attacks.

Rumors of human brigands were spread years ago, but half-elf patrols found their camp. From the looks of it, orc raiders had attacked and killed them all.

It is unknown if the light gray mountains, or the dark gray mountains, are the originals.

There are fish in the rivers, and it is claimed they are very tasty. But don't fish alone or in small groups.

The Maidar River goes to the River Watch to the southeast.

The Legephele Forests stop at the western edge of these mountains. Large numbers of trees don't seem to grow well in these hills and mountains.

The Treeles Vallley fronts the Traraise Caves. There bare no trees, just a few small bushes here and there. Nothing that would block field of fire for weapons at the caves.

Sometimes the junction of Paragaino river and Maidar River can be very dangerous to river traffic. There is a road from the Paragaino river up to the Western Hilll Fort.

The Pralo Triplets are snow covered mountains, they are also extinct volcanos that haven't erupted in hundreds of years.

The River Watch, Western Hill Fort, and the Traraise Faire Caves have a mutual assistance agreement, but they haven't always been able to help each other.

Trolls and hill giants are rumored to be in the gray mountains of The Haunted Mountains.